

Moral Injury and staff wellbeing

Understanding and addressing moral injury in essential workers during the pandemic

Moral injury is being troubled by situations that go against good practice or your values.

A local multiagency project group developed a survey for essential workers during the first wave of the covid19 pandemic. These are the key findings:

21%

reported being significantly troubled by their own actions

60%

were more troubled by other's actions than their own

75%

were significantly troubled by the actions of others in some staff groups

Perceived areas for improvement

Rule communication & compliance

Fair work allocation, homeworking rules & redeployment

Ensuring good patient/client care

Kindness of colleagues, supervisors & public

Having supervisor check-ins & access to support

Safety & Infection Prevention and Control provision/rules

Quick win actions for all

Encourage Kindness

Supervisor check-ins

Enforce rules safely

Clear communication, feedback & response
